About Kalkan

Kalkan is a small and charming town situated in southwest Turkey's Mediterranean coast. It is situated between Fethiye, a tourist hotspot, and Antalya, thus offering the desirable ambiance as a less crowded and personal tropical beach paradise for tourists.

In contrast, Kalkan is not as flamboyant as some of the other destinations which are overcrowded with tourists but embodies the idea of luxury embraced by people without the need for loud music and numerous guests. This town is famous for its clean sandy shoreline, gorgeous beach composed of white pebbles, and gourmet restaurants that are located on the roof terrace.

History

Kalkan was originally a Greek fishing village. Its harbor made it an important trading port during the Ottoman period. However, the town remained relatively small and quiet for much of its history. In 1923, the Greek inhabitants were forced to leave Kalkan during the population exchange between Greece and Turkey.

After that, it became a somewhat forgotten spot until the 1970s, when foreign visitors began to discover its beauty. Today, Kalkan has grown into a luxury destination known for its elegant villas, boutique hotels, and beautiful natural surroundings.

When is the Best Time to Travel to Kalkan Turkiye?

Kalkan enjoys a Mediterranean climate, with hot summers and mild winters. The best time to visit is between April and October. During this period, you can expect sunny days and warm temperatures. July and August are the hottest months, with temperatures often reaching up to 40°C (104°F). If you prefer cooler weather, consider visiting in May or September when temperatures are more comfortable, around 25°C to 30°C (77°F to 86°F).

Winter months can also be pleasant, especially if you're not a fan of the summer heat. From November to March, the weather remains mild, and you'll find the town much quieter. However, some restaurants and hotels may close during this off-peak season.
